VOLTS

Compiled by JOHN A. FERRALL

Tall Story.—Once upon a time a man star out on a hunting trip. He saw a fox beside rock and pulled up his gun to fire. Just th another fox appeared beside the first. The m fired and the bullet hit the sharp edge of t rock, split in half, one half killing each of t foxes. The gun, however, kicked back so ter fically that the hunter was knocked on his be in a brook behind him. He landed in the wa with one hand on a muskrat and the other a beaver. And when he crawled out, clutchi these animals firmly, his trousers were so full brook trout that a suspender button burst off a flew up in the air, killing a passing partridge.

Things We Cannot Hear.—The local ba its ranks sadly depleted, was making a brave b futile effort to provide acceptable music for t holiday crowd. After one particularly bad rend tion, an elderly gentleman made his way up the stand and inquired of the director, "Wh was the piece you just played?" "That," was t solemn reply, "was 'The Death of Nelson.'" can well believe that, Mr. Bandmaster," was reply. "But tell me the name of it, anyway."

Midsummer Night's Dream.—Once upo time a man was taking his family out for a dri in the country. His wife, as usual, sat in the ba seat. Suddenly there came a sound like a r shot and the car was jerked to a stop. "It's blowout," said the husband, after a brief lo "I'll—" "Now, John," protested the wife, firm "you just sit still. As I do the driving from t back seat, it's no more than fair that I shou get out and change the tire."

Big Game Hunter.—He was telling a great exaggerated story of his supposed adventures Africa—and about the fierce lion he had encou tered. "It was a terrifically big fellow," he sai "I knew I couldn't kill him, being unarmed, b I picked up a stick and struck at him as jumped. It hit him on the tail—" he pause impressively. "And that was the end of the lion" suggested a listener.

Meow!—At the club meeting one pompo looking woman was holding forth on the drea she had the night before. "It was terrible," s explained. "I dreamed that all the animals th went to make up my furs were standing ri there at the foot of my bed." In the back the audience a woman turned to her friend. "Ho silly of her to let a few alley cats frighten her, she commented.

Apple Growing.—The apple grower's you son came back from Sunday School quite thrill over the story of Noah and the Ark. "Did y know, Dad," he asked, "that all the animals ca on the Ark in pairs?" "All except the worms said his father bitterly. "They came in apple
